1 AKAR

Shikha Joshi: Ceramics for your table
Shikha Joshi, a studio potter from Round Rock, Texas, originally from New Delhi, India, draws inspiration from the vibrant hues and varied textures of nature. Rocks, tree bark, and algae are among the elements that fuel her creativity. Despite the limitations of an oxidation kiln, she skillfully translates these organic surfaces into her work.

2 Blick Art Materials

Mark Vollenweider: An Audubon Coloring Book
Sharpie drawings of John James Audubon's bird paintings, done in the style of a coloring book.

3 Glassando

Rose Wambsganss: Meditative fine-line artwork
Rose produces vibrant yet whimsical black and white drawings through the ancient, meditative art of Zentangle. Her intricate fine-line artwork requires 10 to 80 hours to finish.

4 Iowa Artisans Gallery

Barbara Weets and Anna Marie Pavlik
Pavlik's aim is to explore issues involving nature that include an element of fate. Through intricate printmaking, she addresses her concern for the survival of natural areas and humanity's relationship to the environment. Weets' nature paintings use transparent watercolor in a non-traditional style. They're bright, vivid, and fresh paintings that make you feel good.

5 Iowa City Senior Center

Janet Stephan
Jan Stephan is a watercolor artist creating semi-abstract, unconventional, honest depictions of local landscapes and occasionally still life. She creates work inspired by the Iowa country she grew up with. The work develops from photographs, real life and her imagination. Jan enjoys creating work with minimal detail and trusting the viewer's imagination as well as her own.

6 Prairie Lights Cafe

Rebecca Clouse: The Times Club Gallery
From the artist: "... to learn more about color, I turned to Matisse and started making watercolor copies of his paintings ... I replaced some elements with dogs ... and because they made me smile I started showing them to people, and then Muttisse! happened." Silent Auction, 60% of proceeds benefit the Iowa City Animal Shelter.

7 Public Space One

Jamie Weinfurter: Building castles in the air
Site-specific installations and sculptural reconstructions of domestic objects that discuss the impermanence of memory based on the artist's own memory loss from a Traumatic Brain Injury, honoring "the little things," queer homemaking, and safe spaces creating access to the arts.
